

Motec Celebrates with Ghana

On the graceful occasion of Ghana's Independence Day, Mr and Mrs Ofori-Atta were invited by the Cambridge University Ghanaian Society on the 6th of March. Mr Paul Ofori-Atta delivered a presentation 'Ghanaians – Look No Further' at the Jesus College in Cambridge.

He said to the audience:

So go tell your friends, brothers, sisters in Cambridge, Liverpool, Leeds, Hull, on the mountains, valleys, churches and mosques that on this day that we celebrate Ghana's independence, the world has become more interdependent. That our sacrifices and the opportunities we enjoy today, the 'brain we gain' here in Cambridge and elsewhere are the formidable resources that we are blessed with to help transform hope into reality for the impoverished, the black star of Ghana and the world at large. We must serve humanity with all the experiences we have acquired. That time is NOW!

Mr and Mrs Ofori-Atta continued to London that evening to join the Ghana High Commission's function to commemorate the Independence anniversary. (Pictures below from the function)

Cultural display was admirable

The Chiefs were there too

All told, the function was a humble celebration of a country trying her best to make a peaceful progress in her development with the support of well meaning world organisations and forward looking countries.
